

Name _____ Hour _____ p. 146-158

Answer the following questions; remember to cite the page where the answer can be found

Granger feels that "when the war is over, they will be of some use in the world". But if not, what will they do?

When asked, "How many of you are there?" Granger answers

What was the most important thing they had to "pound" into themselves?

What does Granger say is the "wonderful thing about man"?

What answer does Montag get when he asks, "Why do you trust me?"

As the group moved along the bank, what was Montag looking for? (Hint: He's not looking for a McDonald's)

Even though the men "carried" in their heads the books, they weren't certain of?

Granger tells Montag about the death of grandfather. What did Granger cry for when he died?

What answer does Montag give Granger when asked, "What did you give to the city?"

What did Granger's grandfather tell him about "leaving something behind"?

What's the difference between the man who cuts lawns and a real gardener?

Summarize the last six lines on page 150.

How long did the war last?

How did Montag, in his mind, picture Mildred's death?

What does he remember regarding where he met Mildred?

As Montag lay on the ground after the bomb blast, what else does he remember? (Hint: bottom of page 153)

How does Granger describe what the city looks like now?

How does Granger compare man to the Phoenix?

As they go upstream, what is the one thought Granger wants the men to hold on to?

According to Granger, "someday we'll remember so much..." and we'll do what?

What is it that Montag will save for noon?